From Cambridge University Press : Medieval Islamic Philosophical Writings (Cambridge Texts in the History of Philosophy) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Medieval Islamic Philosophical Writings (Cambridge Texts in the History of Philosophy):

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. fills important gaps By travel light and smiling the course of philosophy as I experienced it yeas ago was very lopsided when it came to non-Christian/non- nonGreek thinkers. This was especially stupid in the case of neglecting Islamic writers, as they were the source which salvaged Aristotle. This fills in that gaping hole, a little.

Although strongly influenced by Greek thought, Islamic philosophers also developed an original philosophical culture of their own which flourished from the ninth through the fourteenth century. This volume offers new translations of philosophical writings by Farabi, Ibn Sina (Avicenna), Ghazali, Ibn Tufayl, and Ibn Rushd (Averroes). A historical and philosophical introduction sets the writings in context and traces their preoccupations and their achievements.

"the juxtapositions offered by this selection of texts amply display the vitality of Islamic philosophy in its most creative age, which effectively catalyzed the vitality of western medieval dialectical exchanges." Notre Dame Philosophical Studies David B. Burrell, University of Notre Dame "...His decision to focus on the texts which connect this area of study with contemporary philosophical interests will be highly welcomed by any scholar familiar with more recent trends in the textual and historical study of Arabic philosophy. The linguistic quality of the translations is excellent, which is the more remarkable as it lies in the nature of the metaphysical and epistemological texts that Khalidi has chosen for this anthology to be at a highly technical level...This very fine collection of translations of carefully selected important texts may be highly recommended as a textbook." -Heidrun Eichner, University of Halle: Journal of the American Oriental Society About the Author Muhammad Ali Khalidi is Associate Professor of Philosophy at the American University of Beirut.
