China's ten million Hui are one of the Muslim national minorities recognized by the Chinese government. Dru Gladney's fieldwork among these people has enabled him to identify diverse patterns of interaction between their rising nationalism and state policy. Through detailed descriptions and illustrations, Gladney presents a picture of the Hui in their various settings. Drawing on observations of this minority population, he considers the situation of China's minorities generally, their relationship to the Han majority, and the Chinese government's responses to ethnic nationalism within its pluralist society.

Gladney locates the significance of the Hui (and the study of minorities) in their challenge to the dominant Chinese and Western perceptions of China...[A] fine, pioneering work. (Journal of Asian Studies) Muslim Chinese is an anthropological study of the Hui based on three years' fieldwork in China and supported by a formidable battery of references, including most of the important scholarship on Hui history, society, and literature that has emerged...A vivid and detailed picture of Hui life and attitudes.
