From Naval Institute Press : Seaforth World Naval Review 2015 before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Seaforth World Naval Review 2015:

3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. The new naval reference. By Gigant Outstanding and well be the new rival to Janes. Not so big as Janes but more background detail on different navl topics. The graphics are outstanding. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Excellent Survey By OS Human. 0 Excellent survey of the world's naval powers of all sizes. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. ...a Fine book.. By klabautermann.. showing the lastest news about ships , Planes and the currant state of the worlds navies at a good Price ! Highly recommended !!

Now in its seventh year, this annual has established an international reputation as an authoritative but affordable single volume summary of all the developments in the naval world over the previous twelve months. It combines regional surveys with one-off major articles on noteworthy new ships and other important developments. Besides the latest warship projects, it also looks at wider issues of importance to navies, such as aviation and electronics, and calls on experts from around the globe to give a balanced picture of what is going on and to interpret its significance. There are technological reviews dealing with naval aviation by Davis Hobbs, and current mine warfare developments by Norman Friedman, while warship recycling is discussed by Ian Buxton. Intended to make interesting reading as well as providing authoritative reference, it contains specially commissioned drawings and the most up-to-date photographs.

About the Author Conrad Waters, a barrister by training and a banker by profession, has had a lifelong interest in modern navies about which he has written many articles. The founding editor of the World Naval , for a number of years he also compiled the annual review of navies for the journal Warship. He lives in England.
